

BOAZI

[mentioned on visit 1937]

Bosset -- GAB-GAB

Kaumak -- GAB-GAB

- van Baal 1940

Northeast and east of the Yéi-anim we find the Boadzi (called Gab-Gab in older publications), who inhabit the middle Fly- and Lake Murray regions. Linguistically and culturally they have much in common with the upper Bian Marind. Although there are important differences as well they are closer to the Marind than any other tribe we know of, ...

- van Baal 1966:14.

The B°azi-language is spoken in the region commonly called Gab-gab. The native speakers live on either side of the river Fly, where it crosses the Dutch-Australian border. The people call themselves B°azi.

- Boelaars 1950:55.

De bevolking van Bosset behoort tot de boan (bwan) der Boadzi, die gevestigd is in een gebied, dat zich gedeeltelijk over Nederlands gedelleteeljk over Australisch territoir uitstrekt. Op Nederlands gebied liggen de kampongs Bosset met de Wamèk, Bofagaga met de Sanggasé, Gamamit (samengesteld uit de vroegere kampongs Doemangge, Azoe en Goeis) met de Inggias-mensen en de zwerversgroep der Biak. Uit het Digoel-gebied zijn mensen opgedrongen die zich te Kanggauwa vestigden, maar die van de boan der Boadzi gescheiden leven. Op Australisch gebied liggen de Boadzi-kampongs Jagiza (Kaumak-mensen) ook wel Jagidjal genoemd, Goemekan, Zémakan, Mbégoe, Koeni en Ewa, de laatste vijf kampongs met gelijknamige "bangsa". Een indeling volgens de taal geeft een ander beeld te zien en wel als volgt:

A. Koeni-taal met de volgende kampongs (uiteraard geringe dialectische verschillen): Jagiza, Bosset, Bofagaga, Gamamit, Biak, Diwa, Beause en Miravam.

B. Bagoe-taal (Mbégoe-) met de volgende kampongs: Zemaken (en de daar omheen liggende dorpen), Tamoe, Waja Marvoe en Féma (ook wel Féam) en nog een paar andere, minder bekende kampongs. Oorspronkelijk woonden de Wamek- en Sanggasa-mensen op het eiland Nahwe, maar later vertrokken de Sanggase-mensen naar een nieuwe kampong Kikinggagagé en kwamen tenslotte via Koembas in het huidige Bofagaga terecht.

- Zoete 1950(1955):302.

De Boazì-taal wordt gesproken in wat doorgaans genoemd wordt

de Gabgab-streek. De bewoners van die streek zelf noemen zich Boazì, en wonen gedeeltelyk op Nederland, gedeeltelyk op Australisch gebied. De Boazi-stam is onderverdeeld in kleine groepen. Op Nederlands gebied wonen de groepen Inggias, Sanggizì en Wamèk, resp. in de dorpen Gambamit, Bovkàka en Vaosèt; ze tellen samen rond 500 zielen. Op Australisch gebied wonen aan de rechteroever van de Fly-rivier de groep Biàk (niet in dorpen verzameld), en de groep Zimakàn in de dorpen Péraròm, Kavénggà en Komové. Aan de linkeroever woont de groep Gizàm (niet in dorpen), en de groep Kùni in de dorpen Bajàwis, Ndimù en Maélavùam. De groep Mbägu woont in de dorpen Mbavù, Miwà, Fäm en Malavù, en in nog een vyfde waarvan we de naam niet konden achterhalen. De groep Kowmèk woont in een enkel dorp, nl Tunungg, waarheen ze kort geleden verhuisden van Jagizà, dat aan de rechteroever ligt. Hoeveel leden de groepen op Australisch gebied tellen, is niet bekend.

- Drabbe 1954:118.

Boazì ... is spoken on either side of the Upper Fly river in an area commonly called Gabgàb. The speakers live in scattered groups in a great number of villages both on Dutch and Australian territory, the number of speakers in the former amounting to some 500.

- Wurm 1954:303.

The Wamek are one of twelve tribes in the Lake Murray-Middle Fly area. The members of eight of these tribes speak the Boazi language. The Zimakani speakers who live around the southern part of Lake Murray and the confluence of the Fly and Strickland Rivers are divided into three additional tribes, while the members of the twelfth / tribe, the Gumakan, speak both Boazi and Zimakani. ...

The Boazi and Zimakani languages together make up the Boazi Language Family. ...

... the 3,500 Boazi and Zimmakani speakers of the Lake Murray-Middle Fly area are divided into twelve tribes, each of which occupies a more-or-less well-defined territory. In Boazi, these tribes are called mangge izwam, which literally means "land people." In addition to the twelve extant tribes, two other tribes, called Bwita (or Boita) and Gizam, previously lived at Lake Murray but are now extinct.

... according to Voorhoeve (1970), each of the five dialects of the Boazi and Zimakani languages may be spoken by the members of one, or more than one, tribe. Thus, while the Mbegu dialect of Zimakani is spoken only by the members of the Mbegu tribe, the North Boazi dialect of Boazi is spoken by the members of five tribes: Biak, Ewa, Inggyes, Rhanak, and Sanggizi. There are, however, phonemic and lexical differences even between tribes which by Voorhoeve's criteria speak the same dialect. These differences creating a situation which can be described as "sub-dialect chaining," inasmuch as differences between adjacent tribes -- including tribes which according to Voorhoeve speak different languages -- are never enough to impede communication, but differences between tribes which are physically separated by intermediate tribes may have difficulty communicating. It should also be noted that tribes are not necessary unilingual. The members of the Gumakan tribe, for example, speak both Boazi and Zimakani. This is the result of the Gumakan recruitment of men from the Kamek / tribe following the decimation of the Gumakan tribe by the Yéi people to the west ...

Identification. Boazi is the name of a language spoken by approximately 2,500 people who live along the middle reaches of the Fly River and along the central and northern shores of Lake Murray in the southern lowlands of New Guinea. Boazi speakers use the name "Boazi" to refer to their language, but their names for themselves are the names of the eight territorial groups into which they are divided. The use of the name "Boazi" (both by Boazi speakers and others) to refer to all Boazi speakers (or in some cases to refer to those who live along the Fly River as opposed to those who live around Lake Murray) is the result of the recent colonial and current postcolonial context in which Boazi speakers live. ... Early colonial documents also refer to Boazi speakers as "Suki," a name now reserved for culturally similar people living farther down the Fly River.

Location. The Lake Murray-Middle Fly area is located between 6°30' and 8° S, and 141° and 141°5' E. ...

Linguistic Affiliation. According to C.L. Voorhoeve (1970), Boaszi is spoken in three dialects: Kuni at Lake Murray, and North Boazi and South Boazi along the Fly River. The Boazi language is one of two languages in the Boazi Language Family, the other being Zimakani which is spoken around the southern part of Lake Murray and the confluence of the Fly and Strickland rivers.

The Boazi Language Family is the easternmost of the three language families in the Marind Stock, which is part of the Trans-New-Guinea Phylum.

- Busse 1991a:28.

Of the 4,500 people who live in the Lake Murray-Middle Fly area, approximately 3,500 speak the Boazi and Zimakani languages.

There are approximately 2,000 Boazi speakers and about 1,500 Zimakani speakers. Zimakani is spoken by people living around Everill Junction (i.e., the confluence of the Fly and Strickland Rivers) and the southern part of Lake Murray, and Boazi is spoken by people living along the shores of the northern and central parts of Lake Murray and along the Fly River from the Binge River in the north to just above Everill Junction in the south. ...
