(IRARUTU)

Irarutu is now spoken by an estimated 5000-6000 people. ... The 1971 census gives the following figures: Arguni sub-district 3000, Babo sub-district 2000. The two sub-districts ... cover all of the Irarutu speaking area except for part of the Nabi dialect area. A small number of non-local residents is included in the figures. ... The estimate given above takes into account the additional Nabi vilages and the steady increase of the population in Irian Jaya.

- Voorhoeve 1989:108.

My informants distinguished seven varieties of Irarutu, mainly on the basis of lexical differences and differences in ... intonation, stress patterns, and speed of speech. ... The seven dialects are:

1. Nabi, spoken in the villages of Nabi, Rafideso, Werdadne, Owa, and Opu in the valleys of the Nabi and Kuri rivers and in Wagura and Sarebe on the Wagura river. The villages on the Nabi river seem to be bilingual. The second language spoken there was called Nanggwa by one of my informants. This name does not appear in the two existing surveys of Irian Jaya languages (Voorhoeve 1975, Barr and Barr 1978), but could be an alternative name for either Tandia or Mer, spoken to the east and south respectively.

- Voorhoeve 1989:108.

Irarutu is now spoken by and [sic] estimated 5000-6000 people. In 1958 the estimated total, including Nabi, was 4400.

...

- Voorhoeve 1994:251.

My informants distinguished seven varieties of Irarutu, mainly on the basis of lexical differences and differences in 'rimia', a local term covering intonation, stress patterns, and speed of speech. There are two locally recognised differences / in the realization of segmental phonemes which in themselves are not sufficient to set off all varieties from each other. ... The seven dialects are:

1. Nabi, spoken in the villages of Nabi, Refideso, Werdadne, Owa, and Opu in the valleys of the Nambi and Kuri rivers and in Wagura and Sarebe on the Wagura river. The villages on the Nabi river seem to be bilingual. The second language spoken there was called Nanggwa by one of my informants. This name does not appear in the existing surveys of Irian Jaya languages ..., but could be an alternative name for either Tandia of [sic] Mer, spoken to the east and south respectively.

- Voorhoeve 1994:251.

Irarutu speakers themselves distinguish seven variants in their language on the basis of lexical differences and differences in rimia, a local term covering intonation, stress patterns, speed of speech, and differences in the realisation of segmental phonemes. The seven variants are:

1. Nabi, spoken in the valleys of the Nabi and Kuri rivers, and on the Wagura river. In the Nabi villages on the Wagura river also the Babo variant is spoken.
