Moraid is spoken in the interior [of the West Bird's Head] east of Moi, and north of Kalabra and Tehit. It shares 50% cognates with Kalabra, 45% with Kuwani, and 30% with Tehit. Moraid is aberrant in that its cognation percentages with the languages of the south Bird's Head Sub Phylum (trans-New Guinea Phylum) are generally higher than those of its fellow family-members whereas its cognation percentages with the languages of the Central Bird's Head Family and with Amberbaken are lower.

MORAID. The Moraid language has about 1000 speakers ... in the interior, south of the Moi and Abun languages and north of Brat and Kalabra. The meaning of Moraid is the 'Moi people in the interior'. They also call themselves the Koboro tribe. There are reported to be two dialects of Moraid, the names of which were not elicited. ... Moraid speakers are reported to be able to understand Moi, but Moi speakers cannot understand Moraid. ...

Flassy and Stokhof (1979) regard Moi and Moraid as a single language. However this survey concludes that they are distinct.

Lexically they are less than [sic] 50% cognate, phonologically Moraid has prenasalized stops and nasal vowels, while Moi has vowel harmony. Grammatically they have different noun phrase word order.
