The Windesi language is one of a group of dialects, sometimes called Windesi-Wandamen, which extends along the shores (except the southernmost point) of the Wandamen Bay northward to Sjari, inland across the narrow neck of New Guinea formed by the Idora isthmus, and even a certain distance westward along both the northern and the southern shores of the Bintuni Bay (MacCluer Gulf), including / the Steenkool (Bintuni) district on the northern shore and Wamesa in the [---] district, on the southern shore.

(WONDAMA)

... as far as the neck of land between Bentuni and Geelvink Bay, as well as in Japen island, Wondama is spoken by some 10,000 people, including the Windesi (a name formerly used for the language itself). In Japen it is limited to the southern part of the island and shows dialect variations due to the influence of the original Japen languages. ...
