

WUTUNG

[passim in text]

Wutung (Oenaki, Oinâke)
- Friederici 1910a.

[January, 1910: from Eitape to Hollandia]

Was die an der Grenze sitzende Bevölkerung betrifft, so gehören die drei Skoo- oder Seka-Dörfer sprachlich noch zu der Familie, die in Deutsch-Neuguinea über Wutung, Yako, Waremo und Wanimo bis nach Laitere geht. Sie spricht eine Papua-Sprache.

... Further along the coast to the west, within less than a mile of the border of Netherlands New Guinea, is Wutong, also known as Oinake. The three Seko villages in Hollandia are also of the same language, and apparently, generally of the same custom. Wutong and Seko people are linked by marriage.

... the Vanimo coastal area. It covers the coastal villages from Leitere to the Netherlands New Guinea border, and the Sko language in Netherlands territory belongs to the same / language group. Vanimo and Wutung, the two varieties of speech found in the area, can be regarded with Sko as dialects of a single language. The three vary considerably in vocabulary, but structurally they are one.

- Capell 1962:37-38.

Zwischen Tami-Mündung und Robidé-Huk befindet sich das Gebiet der Wutong. Sie scheinen in drei nahe beieinanderliegenden Dörfern oder Teilen eines Dorfes zu leben. Die einzelnen Namen dieser Dörfer, wie auch die Anzahl ihrer Bewohner sind nicht bekannt. Die Wutong sprechen eine nicht austronesische Sprache [Friederici 1910:332, 1912:258, 1913:36; W. Schmidt 1926:152; Thomas 1941:163], die zur oben erwähnten Gruppe gehört.

Über das östlich von Wutong liegende Dorf Mosu fehlt jegliche Angabe, auch wird es in keiner der Quellen erwähnt. Außer diesem nicht belegbaren Dorf ist die Küste östlich von Wutong auf einer Länge von etwa 25 km unbesiedelt. Dann beginnt das Siedlungsgebiet der Vanimo.

... the language marked as Sangke, and previously spoken in at least three different settlements inland from Skou across the Tami river¹³, is now exclusively spoken by people living at Nyao village in Papua New Guinea, ... There are no permanent settlements, however. The land east of the Tami river belongs to Wutung, but again there are no permanent settlements on this land, though Wutung land holders do frequently cross the border for routine garden maintenance. ...

- Donohue 2002 Ts:[16].

¹³ Cheesman (1938) refers to Njau and two other, un-named villages. Skou people recognise the names Te Jáwung for modern Nyao, in Papua New Guinea, and Te Húele, Te Nóemo, Te Kófo, and Te Pòeng as villages inland on the Papuan side of the border. Of course, not all of these names are necessarily contemporaneous: since villages traditionally move around every few years, sometimes keeping the same name and sometimes changing, one settlement may be referred to by more than one name, especially when recalled over five decades of time.
